TV WEEK

"MOONLIGHTING:

SEASONS ONE AND TWO": Every now and then, a television series makes a tried-and-true genre seem fresh again -- and in the mid-1980s, this show did that for the private-detective category. It also made a major star of former bartender Bruce Willis while recharging the career of Cybill Shepherd, who played Maddie Hayes to his David Addison, dissimilar and mutually attracted partners in an investigation agency. The verbal ingenuity of the scripts was one of the show's hallmarks; so was its Al Jarreau-performed title song. DVD extras: three "making-of" documentaries; audio commentary by Shepherd, Willis and Glenn Gordon Caron; deleted scenes; outtakes. (Not rated: AS, P, V)
